Online tutoring is now a highly immersive experience that typically spans online learning portals, video conferencing via Skype, and screen sharing. Over the next few years, emerging technologies like virtual reality will also play more of a role in online education.
What makes a great online tutor?
The best teachers have a unique ability to connect with students and help them grasp difficult concepts, and tenacity to never give up.
Think twice before certification
Teaching requirements
Minimum upload speed of 2 Mbps, and 4 Mbps for downloads
The bottom line here is that starting your own home tutoring business is likely to generate far greater revenue than tutoring for an online platform. However, it's also most likely going to require a lot more work and a larger time commitment.
Start by outlining a basic plan and decide if you want to work with younger students, high school kids, or college students. Then, explore the various online tutoring companies listed here and find a company that's a good fit for your qualifications and experience.
